EDUCATION

FINANCE

AND POLICY

At the dawn of the twenty-first century, education policy-makers, administrators, and economists face new public policy developments affecting educational institutions and systems. To aid in the deliberations and to help frame the intellectual discourse on education policy and practice, the American Education Finance Association and The MIT Press have launched a new journal, Education Finance and Policy. The journal's mission is to promote understanding of the means by which global resources can be justly generated and productively engaged to enhance human learning at all levels. It will connect the individuals who conduct research and those who are responsible for education finance-related professional activities, institutional management, and government operation. Education Finance and Policy will also inform policy debates on a wide range of topics, including: school accountability; school choice; education standards; equity and adequacy in school finance; within-school and district resource allocation; teacher compensation, training and labor markets; instructional policy; higher education productivity and finance; and special education. The first issue of this exciting new quarterly will be available in February 2006.

CALL FOR PAPERS

Education Finance and Policy will publish high-quality original research articles that are relevant to current policy debates. In addition, the editors invite replication studies of controversial and policy-relevant research, and invite submissions from policy-makers and education practitioners regarding policy developments and the interplay between research, policy-making, and practice.

Instructions for authors are available at <http://mitpress.mit.edu/efp>

Submissions and questions can be directed to the editors at efp@cba.ufl.edu
