We are grateful to the Center for American Progress (CAP), and in particular to John D. Podesta, who has long understood the role of bioethics in a new agenda for progressive policy in America. CAP has given us and our colleagues a venue for the development of many of the ideas discussed in this book.

Thanks are due as well to the interns who have worked at CAP since the founding of the Progressive Bioethics Initiative there, bright and energetic young people in whose hands lies the future of this work. Special thanks go to Sirine Shebaya and Justin Masterman for their assistance with the preparation of the manuscript.

We greatly appreciate the support of the MIT Press and Clay Morgan, who have given us the opportunity to present these ideas to a wider audience.

Our colleagues and friends at the University of Pennsylvania Center for Bioethics and the Yale Law School have provided a rich and challenging environment for our own continuing intellectual development. And most importantly we thank our families, who have put up with many a discussion of bioethics at the dinner table, offered advice and encouragement, and helped in countless ways throughout the whole process.
